Prisoner populations face many challenges to which they are not equipped to cope. In particular, the impact of incarceration on the oral health of prisoners is significant. Patients who are incarcerated in the state of Wisconsin are treated by the Department of Corrections. The purpose of this study was to assess patient satisfaction with orthodontic treatment in a women's prison. A retrospective study was conducted to examine the 2-year outcomes of a total of 39 female orthodontic patients who were treated by 1 of 2 orthodontists in a Wisconsin women's prison. Using established assessment instruments, patients completed interviews at the outset of orthodontic treatment and at the time of their exit from the prison. Most patients were incarcerated for nonviolent offenses. Treatment time was relatively short (2.2 years) and patients generally expressed high levels of satisfaction with their outcome. Although the study was limited in its sample size, it does provide support for the initial conclusions drawn by others regarding the lack of oral health disparities in this patient population. This study provides support for the conclusion that good orthodontic care can be provided in prisons. [J Orthod. 2012;32(11):500-506.]. I don't know if this is going to be of any use. I've been wondering the same thing myself. This is what
