A Study of the Effect of Low Oxygen Atmosphere on Mesenchymal Stem Cell Differentiation. It is known that hypoxia plays a key role in the differentiation of stem cells. Therefore, the differentiation of mesenchymal stem cells (MSCs) under hypoxic conditions was studied in this study. Cells were cultured under two different oxygen levels, 21% and 1%, respectively. After 3, 7, and 14 days, the expression of genes encoding bone, fibroblast and chondrocyte markers were analyzed. We found that the expression of fibroblast marker gene FSP-1 was more than that of the control group at 21% oxygen concentration. The expression of cartilage markers (sox9, aggrecan and type II collagen) was significantly different at 1% oxygen concentration than that of the control group. Based on the results of this study, it seems that 1% oxygen is an effective condition for MSC
