The brand he built – now headed by his son Oscar de la Renta Jr. – represents the worldwide fashion community, with departments at Neiman Marcus and Saks Fifth Avenue in the U.S., Harvey Nichols in London and Galeries Lafayette in Paris. His design house continues to develop a reputation for exquisitely tailored men’s and women’s clothing that varies in style and price. De la Renta is best known for his signature silk twill pants, but he also designed cotton linen suits for Town and Country and wool-and-silk suits for Neiman Marcus in the early 1980s. The $84 million estate in East Hampton, which has 173 acres and more than 80 buildings, features three buildings devoted to the collection of de la Renta’s donated art, design sketches, embroideries, his couture designs, everyday wear and other memorabilia. For seven years starting in 1977, he was a major donor to the National Symphony Orchestra, where he assisted conductor Leonard Slatkin in designing its annual concerts. He was also a member of the support group for the Hollywood Bowl, an annual music series that ran for 20 years. “He was doing a lot of good in the community,” said John Philip Nash, chief executive of the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, who befriended de la Renta in 1985 when Nash was named music director. “He’s a very generous man and he did a lot of great things.” The elder de la Renta is survived by his wife, Terese Yale de la Renta, and his five children from
