The war between human and zombie is now over. Humanity won the battle, but the war has only just begun. Based on historical accounts, Iron Danger is a quick-playing card game with basic rules that creates a real sense of heroism, victory, and death. That's right - real heroes die. But you will fight alongside them. Iron Danger is a game of one-on-one battle against hordes of hordes of zombies. The game requires quick thinking, fast reflexes and an intuition that rarely fails you. You will command and lead a brigade of eight to twelve heroes with armor, weapons, and special abilities. Every battle is different - from ancient cities to frozen regions, from the Pacific to the Appalachian mountains. Two players pit their heroes against hordes of hordes of zombies. The winner is whoever defeats the most enemies. In Iron Danger, you get the chance to play as a Zombie too. Game ends when one of the two players is no longer able to continue. All zombies stand still on the map, slowing down gameplay, and can be activated in the end phase, that is, right before the game ends. Your selection of units and ability cards will determine your strategy for defeating your opponents, and the resources at your disposal. Unique Heroes and the Cards: There are different combinations of heroes that form the unique features of Iron Danger. Heroes are chosen from varied and non-standard units, and either equipped with armor or not. Each hero has unique card abilities and cards. The cards are chosen at random before gameplay begins. You are the General, and you have to choose a strategy for victory. The game takes place on a digital map with no boundaries. The only card/ability that exists is the ability card. There are seven different abilities, from the well-balanced passive abilities to the strong offensive and defense abilities. Every hero will get a unique card back, which you can use to power up or heal your hero. Each hero has different abilities, and those abilities will be at their highest level at the start of the game. Maps and Abilities: There are 7 maps available for Iron Danger. Every map has a unique number of resources and a unique enemy/hero ratio. Each map also has different and unique mini-bosses and events. There are 4 types of enemy (zombies, skeletons, catapults, and giants), ages of the conference Dr. Sindri Davidsson-Wi - Inventa Packages of the conference 14. Software in everyday life A descriptive study of software used in everyday activities as shown on the Swedish Fire Alarm & Security system A case of agent based and connectionist systems Almudena Lamo-Garcia Judith Grinholz NUBK (The Centre for Activated Design and Architecture) Stockholm 6, 531 28 Stockholm, Sweden Abstract Objectives 1. We will create concepts and ideas that brings forth the meaning of the software. 2. We will create a software represented in the system that contains the information that the system will convey. 3. We will look for patterns in the software that can be introduced in new software. 4. Methods, software and a descriptive study of everyday software. 5. Results and conclusion present a few considerations that need to be a closer study. We will deliver more information in the conference. 15. Thesis 1. Application-based system comprehends a vast range of technologies as well as the relationship between individuals and their professional life. Many people deal with information in their daily lives, and some are even one of the ones who have manage information on a large scale. The special topic of this thesis deals with software applications that are used in everyday life, in other words, applications of technology which are used in the work environment. This thesis is about the software that generate, process and link information, devices and people. 2. The first type of application is a procedural application, that deals with mass of everyday tasks. It consists of programs written by technologists. The procedural applications usually handle the main tasks of an organization by streamlining and managing processes. This software focuses on implementing new business concepts and helping the business to run the business. Examples of procedural applications are ERP (Enterprise Resource Planning) and CRM (Customer Resource Management). The second type of application is used by the ordinary consumer. These applications are mostly of the web-based type, where users interact with applications available through the web. Examples of web-based applications are online banking, web email, social networking and web of course there are also certain mobile or smartphone applications. Devices could be single devices or individual users. For example, only one mobile user may use the same smartphone for phone calls and business card scanning. An individual may have

Shindig is our first ever point-and-click narrative adventure game. It's set in a world of smiles, where everyone is cool and sympathetic. It's a feelsy experience, where you get to help out a rainbow of colourful characters with their problems. It's got a fun, not-too-serious storyline that will make you feel good. And it's all presented in a gorgeous, original hand-drawn setting. We're just two devs, so the whole thing is really daaamn cute! About I made Shindig Peter Matson and Simon Leach, the makers of Shindig, are two game developers and former media students who used to make Minecraft and Superbrothers Sword and Sworcery and are now working together on their first narrative adventure, which is just as much fun as you'd expect. You can find Simon on Twitter @s_leach and Peter on Twitter @peter_matson Join us on Facebook for frequent updates and sneak peaks! Like us on Twitter for exciting announcements and hints and tips. Hola! Ooooooh! I love early retro indie games! Shindig is one of those games that I really want to play more now that I know more about it. Hopefully by playing it I can pick up some tips on how to make my own games better. I have been wanting to pick up Simon Leach's other games, such as Don't Wake Daddy, for some time now, but haven't quite had the time to. Edit: I have now played through Shindig, and I think it's a really neat point-and-click adventure game. It's very picture-heavy, which I love, and it's super cute! The characters are pretty fun, the puzzles are pretty mindless, and there is a ton of humour in it. While the game is set in a type of fantasy world, it's not lighthearted like The Dig, which has a heavier horror/suspense vibe. The story is pretty open, so you can play the game however you want. The only bad thing is that it's a little difficult to find on Steam. Yeah, I played Shindig over the weekend and I really liked it. I'm glad you mentioned that the game is more of a light-hearted, open-
