I just wanted to say that, as a designer, I really LOVE that HTML/CSS can do so many things, but you also have to know when things should stop. There's a reason why anyone who is even remotely comfortable in a programming language has to have a deeper understanding of the underlying technologies that they program for. Otherwise, you will just get in over your head and things will take way longer than you should and/or you'll do something so very simple that it should take you a few seconds and takes hours. You also have to be able to figure out when your CSS isn't being used as intended and 6d1f23a050
